Item C

Concerns have been raised that students from poorer backgrounds are discouraged from applying to university for a number of reasons including the fear of debt. Claire Callender and Jon Jackson investigated the attitudes of students in England who were considering going to university towards debt, and their decisions about whether or not to apply to university.

Callender and Jackson compared students from poorer families with students from better-off backgrounds. They wanted to find out if concerns about cost and debts, especially student loan debt, were more likely to discourage poorer students from applying to university.

The research involved a survey of prospective higher education students and produced quantitative data. A total of 101 school sixth forms and further education colleges agreed to take part and 3582 self-completion questionnaires were sent out. The schools and colleges were a national stratified random sample. Students were asked whether they agreed with statements about the costs and benefits of going to university.

Sociologist Talcott Parsons suggested that school acts as a bridge between the home and wider society. School plays a key role in the process of socialisation, following on from the socialisation that takes place in the family. Parsons argued that this is necessary because the family and wider society work in different ways and children need to adapt if they are to cope in the wider world. Schools continue the socialisation process of teaching the norms and values of society.
